Continue to Pompey's Pillar, which is a massive 25-metre high pink granite pillar that measures 9 meters around its girth. When the Christian Crusaders came to Egypt they credited this to Pompeii, however the pillar is in fact all that remains of the very grand Serapeum. Moreover, the myriad activities it offers have made it a place for open discussion, dialogue, and understanding.

Then head to Kom el Dikka, the remains of an affluent Roman residential area. The site includes a Roman Amphitheatre, with 13 white-marble terraces that are arranged around the arena, and are in excellent condition.
