SMU Fondren Science Hall Room 123

What happens to the human personality after death? Does it dissolve, as do the molecules of the body, back into the star stuff we are made of? Or does some part of us, a soul, a spirit, survive death?

The Ancient Egyptians pondered these issues and formed elaborate and intricate theories of what happens after death. Throughout the long ages of their culture, ideas changed, and the location of the Afterlife changed: Underworld, or Heaven above, or somehow both. Their thoughts on the nature of the surviving aspect of a human being changed, too. Would there still be the human pleasures of eating and drinking and making love?
